“ *Bruce became both my home builder and my friend 47 years ago. Most things were a bit simpler and straight forward in those days, and it was easier to take the measure of a man and his character. Such was the case with Bruce and his amazing crew of "Dutch" carpenters and related trades craftsmen. Chief among the character traits that I got to see first-hand in Bruce was that he was a man of his word, and he stood by what he promised to do. Sandy, he loved you with all his heart. And you likewise loved him and stood by your vows as his wife and took darn good care of him, especially in the later days. The tender nickname for Bruce of "Honey" was quite appropriate, and he tolerated that endearing moniker, even from me. I will sincerely miss my dear friend Honey, but my faith allows me to know he's in a better place, free of pain and resting peacefully now. We will all see you again Bruce, so keep the light on.
