“ Uncle Lee was very supportive of my father's (Clarence's) family. When Clarence was unable to support his family on farming, Uncle Lee had him come work with him. Dad really enjoyed the work and his co-workers. Dad and Lee often hunted together and made several trips out west to hunt. Dad enjoyed these times immensely-- the fellowship, being in nature, seeing the country, and meeting like-minded people.

When Dad became symptomatic with Parkinson's like disease, Lee helped wherever he could. He and my brother-in-law re-roofed the butcher shop when Dad no longer was able to. And after Dad died, he continued to advise and help my mother, Edna, on issues of managing the farm. When Mom was no longer able, he helped and advised me as I took on those responsibilities. His help was invaluable and I will always be deeply grateful. He was a good human being.
