“ It's so very hard to express in a few words even a memory of Vladimir. Someone who embodied everything that is LIFE; health, faith, exuberance, joy, energy, sweetness, patriotism and pride, in his wife and little son and family--these are Life! Nothing about death resembles Vlad! And here we are, with this aching gap between us!

Yet we have a hope! That we will once again see him, apart from death, apart from sadness, whole and complete. More complete than ever before, more alive than we ever knew him!

John and I have been thinking of the time we visited you guys, and Vladimir (at about age 3), latched onto John, sitting in his lap, listening to him. He was napping when we left. But we didn't get very far when Grant called to ask us to return because Vlad was brokenhearted that he didn't get to say goodbye. So we did. It was surprising, and so cute that it was very important to him.

So here we are, now. Vlad, we didn't get to say goodbye! But we are counting on that glorious day when we'll say Hello. Looking forward to that.
