“ When I was a child I thought pappy was one of the best people on earth. He had such a big influence on my life. From teaching me that just about anything is fixable with a little bit of elbow grease, to how to plant a garden, to the best way to win at horseshoes and mini golf. I could write a book and it still couldn't cover all the things he taught me and the memories I had with him.

One of the best gifts pappy gave us was his time. Time to talk, time to help, time to make you laugh. Even as a child, pappy wouldn't just tell you to go off to play. He would listen to you talk about all the crazy thoughts small children have and be excited along with you. He always found the time to be there for others without any expectations in return. Once a bee crawl in bottom of my pant leg while I was driving. I pulled over and got the bee out but it was still in the car. For those who don't know I'm terrified of bugs. So I call my pappy and while most people would have shook their head at me and not come help over something so minor pappy came to my rescue.

He taught me that family is the most important thing to have. Even if you might not always get along or agree with their choices you still make room in your heart for them. Every holiday everyone was welcome. Actually every day everyone was welcome. You were never expected to knock and could just walk right in. Pappy house was not my house but pappy house always felt like home. A place to go for laughter and joy. A place to go where you always loved and cared for. A place where no matter your personality you're never judged.

I love you pappy and I miss you. I also thank you for taking the time for me, for teaching me new things, and for all the memories that cherish everyday.

Your granddaughter
